

Lakefront Park - Kissimmee, Florida

The City of Kissimmee wanted to showcase both their cultural and historical heritage to the community through the use of structures at Lakefront Park along Lake Tohopekaliga. This area had a strong Native American influence and was instrumental in the development of agricultural trade at the turn of the century. The old homes (owned by captains of paddlewheel boats, land barrons and wealthy cattlemen) had metal roofs, and the use of wood and brick were common place in both business and residential structures. White was a predominant color of buildings and in some later years, ceiling fans became common amenities to structures.

Project Brief:

The ideas for Lakefront Park were first discussed following a tradeshow. Additional meetings were then scheduled with the architect to discuss our qualifications and capabilities. Poligon was the preferred vendor because we offer a turn key solution, providing design, engineering, and manufacturing in one place. We also treat each shelter equally and with high attention to detail, whether it is a small square or a large custom structure.

After the client saw the first series of structures installed they decided to add more. What started as 8-10 buildings has grown to 20+ buildings to date. Two large multi-gable structures are the centerpiece of the park. The first houses restrooms and concessions while the other was designed with a fireplace in the middle. Both are capable of housing large events. The walkways are covered with gable roof shelters and incorporate louvers to help with air flow. A large trellis also creates a beautiful backdrop for weddings.

Customer Testimonial

“We are very pleased with the structures but moreover, with the attention to detail that your entire team put into making them focal points in the park. They are gorgeous structures and we’ve received many positive comments. There is no doubt that our citizens are thrilled with and support the improvements that we have made to the park. Our new wedding lawn had multiple reservations months before it was opened, our pavilions are used daily for picnics and relaxation, and we have reservations for family reunions, business events, birthday parties and various social functions. It is certainly the crown jewel of our city. You have an outstanding product and an exceptional team of employees that are obviously dedicated to the needs of their customers. We made a great choice to go with Poligon!” -Dan Loubier, Director, City of Kissimmee Parks, Recreation & Public Facilities Dept.
